

Feminine Transit : The condition of women and the development of consciousness in selected novels of Henry James.

by

Kaye Fairfield

This thesis submitted in fulfilment of the requirements of the M.A. (Honours) degree of the Department of English and Communication Studies at the University of New England, August 1993.

‘... the sight of gilt wires and bruised wings,
the spacious but suspended cage, the home of eternal unrest, of pacings, beatings, shakings, all so vain, into which the baffled consciousness helplessly resolved itself. The cage was the deluded condition...’ *

---

* The Golden Bowl, p. 449.

I certify that the substance of this thesis has not already been submitted for any degree and is not being currently submitted for any other degree.

I certify that any help received in preparing this thesis, and all sources used, have been acknowledged in this thesis.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS :

I wish to thank Dr. Michael Lee for his assistance in supervising this thesis.

Also, Dr. Catherine Waters for her advice on relevant reading material in the early stages of thesis preparation, and Ms.Daphne Jones in the Faculty of Arts for her kind assistance.

Finally, Rex and Robyn Bunn and Rosemary Mort, whose support and encouragement has been fundamental to the completion of this work.

Thank you all.

CONTENTS

	Pages
INTRODUCTION :	1	-	10
CHAPTER ONE : Entrapment	11	-	45
CHAPTER TWO : Confrontations	46	-	82
CHAPTER THREE : Sexuality and Power	83	-	115
CHAPTER FOUR : Moral Reassessment	116	-	151
CHAPTER FIVE : Awakening	152	-	189
CONCLUSION :	190	-	197
BIBLIOGRAPHY:	198	-	208