

Appendix 1

AGE AND SEX

- The median age of the Greek-born was 46.2 years. This compared with a median age for
 - Australian-born: 27.5 years
 - all overseas-born: 41.7 years
 - the total Australian population: 31.1 years.
- Only 1.5% were under 15 years, compared with 23.3% of the total Australian population. This low proportion of young people was a reflection of low immigration from Greece in recent years.
- 7.9% were aged 65 years and over, which was less than the Australian average of 10.6% in that age group. However, their age profile showed that, for the next 20 years, ever-increasing numbers of Greek-born would reach 65.
- Males outnumbered females overall 51.4% to 48.6%, but females outnumbered males in some age groups (30-54 years; 65+).
- In all States and Territories, Greek-born males outnumbered females in the 55-64 age group. Proportionately, the imbalance was largest in the ACT where males outnumbered females by 70.0%. Numerically, the imbalance was largest in Victoria and New South Wales.

PERIOD OF RESIDENCE IN AUSTRALIA
(Overseas-born Residents Only)

- The median period of residence was 22.7 years.
- The largest group (29.5%) had arrived in the period 1962-1966.
- Two-thirds (67.1%) of Australia's Greek-born population have lived in Australia for more than 20 years.
- Overall, 22.5% had lived in Australia for 30 years or more. These early arrivals made up 46.9% of the Greek-born population of Western Australia and 46.4% of Queensland.
- Only 6,167 or 4.6% of the Greek-born had been in Australia for less than 10 years. This group of recent arrivals made up 22.4% of the Greek-born population of the Northern Territory.

QUALIFICATIONS
(Persons Aged 15 Years and Over)

This topic includes qualifications gained both before and after arrival in Australia.

- Greek-born tended to be less qualified than the Australian population in general.
- 77.5% possessed no qualifications, compared with 84.5% of the Greek-born population in 1981. (Refer to Table 1.)
- Males were more likely than females to be qualified, though more women than men held graduate diplomas and 'other' (non-trade) certificates.

Source: Aus., ABS, Census 1971. The total number of persons of a specific ethnic 'origin' has been arrived at by adding persons born in that country of origin to persons born in Australia with either (1) both parents born in that country or (2) mother born in that country and father born in a different non-English-speaking country. Ratios have then been calculated with the number of ethnic professionals in each occupational category as the numerator and the total number of persons of that origin, divided by 1000, as the denominator.

Questions asked during the interviews

1. Please give a brief description of your life and education before you migrated to Australia.
2. What were the reasons that made you decide to migrate to Australia?
3. Please describe your impressions and emotions during your first few years of adaptation to the Australian conditions.
4. What kind of difficulties did you face during your settling in period as a migrant and your establishment as a professional migrant?
5. Looking back through the years you have been in Australia, are you satisfied with your overall achievements in your professional career and private pursuits?
6. If you try to compare your social, professional and financial situation in Australia to what you think you could have achieved if you had not migrated, would your situation today be any different?
7. What contacts have you maintained with friends, relatives and/or colleagues overseas?
8. What has been your association with and contribution to the Greek and Australian communities? Please refer to social and professional aspects.
9. How do you visualise the future development of Hellenism in Australia?
10. Please describe your family situation in Australia.

Note: The aim of the questions was to obtain personal information on the private and professional life of the participants regarding their background in Greece and up to the present time, and the way they perceived the future of the Greek community in Australia.

Message from the Minister

Immigration policy touches every Australian.

As we mark 50 years of planned migration, we are celebrating the contribution nearly five and a half million migrants have made to our society.

Today, four in 10 Australians are migrants or the children of migrants. One in four of us comes from a non-English speaking background. We come from 240 parts of the world. Every language of the world is spoken here, every religion is practised and every culture is understood.

Immigration has changed how our cities look, how we work, how we trade, how we play, how we learn — and most importantly how we see ourselves as Australians.

Thanks to immigration, our cultural breadth is greater. Our economic prospects are brighter. We are better equipped to take our place in the world, particularly in our own region.

This transformation didn't happen by accident.

It has come about because of the 'fair go' philosophy of the Australian people, and because the Australian Government has planned carefully for the future — not only in migration policy, but across all portfolios.

We have worked together towards a more socially just society, which involves everyone. Our non-discriminatory migration and multicultural policies promote Australia's cultural diversity as a tangible national asset.

This has been happening at a time of enormous change.

The information and technological revolution means that ideas and money are crossing the world in a matter of seconds. Old national borders have broken down, more people than ever before are moving around the world.

In the last few years, my department has had to change dramatically to keep up with the pace of change. There have been new developments almost every day in both policy and practice.

Our Migration Program has changed in size and composition, to reflect changed economic conditions and the different skills we need to compete in a global economy.

We are constantly reviewing our Humanitarian Program to ensure that we can respond quickly to people forced to flee their homelands. At the same time, we have had to accommodate and encourage massive growth in tourism. Things have been moving so quickly that it is easy to lose sight of the big picture.

This booklet, People and Progress, is a snapshot of how over the past three years the Department of Immigration and Ethnic Affairs has helped pave the way for Australia in the 21st Century as a society which welcomes the international exchange of capital, talent, ideas — and people.

Senator the Hon. Nick Bolkus,
Minister for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs and Minister Assisting the Prime Minister for Multicultural Affairs.

and Ethnic Affairs, Canberra, 1995, p.3.

OCCUPATION

(Employed Persons Aged 15 Years and Over)

- The main occupational categories of Greek-born females were Labourers & Related Workers (34.1%) and Plant & Machine Operators (21.5%).
- The main occupational categories of Greek-born males were Labourers & Related Workers (28.6%) and Tradespersons (22.6%).
- Females were three times more likely to be Clerks than males (9.6% to 3.1%).
- Males were almost four times more likely to be Tradespersons than females (22.6% to 5.9%).
- A much higher proportion of Greek-born females in Victoria were Plant and Machine Operators than in New South Wales (29.7% to 15.2%).
- New South Wales and Victoria had appreciably lower proportions of Greek-born Managers & Administrators than did other States.
- Compared with the population in general, Greek-born were markedly under-represented in Professional and Para-Professional occupations.
- They were over-represented as Tradespersons, Labourers & Related Workers and Plant and Machine Operators & Drivers.
